Hillary Abraham

Hillary Abraham combines her research and administrative backgrounds to ensure client projects are finished at the highest standard and on time. With nearly a decade of research management experience in academic and industry settings, Hillary has a deep understanding of the research process in a client-facing context. She specializes in planning rigorous research projects on quick timelines, and also has experience conducting interviews, designing surveys, and performing statistical analysis.

Prior to joining ThemeVision, Hillary worked as a research specialist at Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) where her work focused on automobile driver acceptance and understanding of semi-automated vehicles. At MIT, she managed multiple concurrent research projects on various scales, from brief online surveys to multi-year on-road studies of large vehicle fleets. Hillary has been quoted extensively in popular media and has authored several peer-reviewed publications.

Hillary received her B.A. in Anthropology from the University of Michigan. She earned her M.S. in Informatics from the University of California, Irvine.
